Our Aging Population

We've all been hearing for years how our population is aging and how we'd better be prepared to do some adjusting to fit the new circumstances. And now we get predictions that this new trend will move upward sweepingly in the next 20 years or so.

According to the Health Information Foundation, almost one in every 10 Americans today is over 65, as compared with about one in 25 in 1900.

At the American Medical Association's recent Chicago meeting, Dr. Walter Bierring, a past president, forecast that within two decades one in every seven Americans will be above 65. And he went on to say that life spans of 100 years will begin to be common in the period ahead.

This steady aging brings with it many problems, of course. The basic one is economic security.

As the Foundation observes, some 63 per cent of people 65 and over were gainfully employed in 1900. Today only 24 per cent of those in that age bracket are so occupied. This is a startling statistic in the light of the great growth in numbers of our elderly citizens.

A good part of the explanation lies in the fact that half a century ago more than 50 per cent of the 65-and-over group lived in rural areas. There they could work as long as they were fit. Retirement was gradual, and adjustment to the aging process less extreme.

Nowadays nearly two-thirds of the aged reside in urban areas. Most often they lose out in competition with younger workers, or are hit by arbitrary retirement regulations. By one estimate, some 40 per cent of the males over 65 actively seek further employment but can't get it.

Naturally, social security programs, public and private, provide some protection for older people. But federal authorities estimate that under present U.S. and state laws the public burden will rise to $11.3 billion by 1970, as compared with a mere $1.1 billion in

A much better answer would be to keep these folk working longer in gainful jobs. The benefit to them is obvious. The public and private cost of pension programs will be much less.

Furthermore, many economists forecast something of a manpower shortage for America in the next decade at least. This forecast is founded on the fact of a diminished birth rate in the depression 1930's. The children of that era are just now coming into the nation's labor force.

Recently the Wall Street Journal reported growing concern among business firms over these problems. Some companies actually are boosting the retirement age and teaching elderly. workers how to adjust to the new situations they face.

We need a great deal more of this. Our older people are a great reservoir of skill and experience. To throw it away is wasteful and costly both for them and for the country. It will become more so as time goes on.

WHICH ARE TOP SEVEN NATURAL WONDERS?-In this bumper year for visitors to the nation's national parks, surest way to start a hassle is to arbitrarily list the seven top natural wonders of our country. You take your vacation and make your own selection from among the sights, several of which are illustrated in sketch, above. No one-but no one-will go out on a limb and be identified with an opinion concerning anything so personal as appreciation of color, grandeur, majesty or sheer beauty. Travel agencies, park officials, tour agencies—all remain mum. Selection, following, is a concensus of several authorities who are vigorously anonymous: Grand Canyon, Yosemite, Yellowstone, Crater Lake, Carlsbad Caverns, Mount Rainier, Rainbow Bridge.
